Implications of processing the personal data of former employees for commercial purposes

Employers typically rely either on employee consent or the necessity for contractual performance (or both) as a basis for lawfully processing their employees' personal data. However, certain legal questions arise where an employer continues to process an employee's personal data after the termination of the employment contract. Is such post-employment processing of personal data permitted under the law? If so, can the post-employment processing be carried out for commercial purposes? What restrictions does the law provide in relation to such processing of personal data?

Renewed efforts by the taxman to collect rental income tax

The Kenya Revenue Authority (KRA) will soon be knocking on your tenant's door to find out how much the tenant pays as rent and who is the owner of the property. On 18 October 2022, the KRA issued a notice to the public of its intent to undertake a data collection exercise on rental properties within Nairobi City County and the Nairobi Metropolis as part of its tax base expansion programme. The taxman's move to get information about landlords from tenants represents a change in approach on the KRA's part as it has previously collected similar information through the Kenya Power and Lighting Company (KPLC) and other agencies.

Trademarks and rebranding

Trademarks represent a form of intellectual property that is rooted in the heart of every business. It provides businesses with a unique identity for the brand, its products and/or services, which is how the enterprise connects with their stakeholders. A brand's identity is often refreshed, through corporate and commercial rebranding exercises which, by their nature, can affect its entire conceptual framework or structures such as its manifesto, mission and vision statement, core product line, etc. In this video, Shem Otanga, a Partner in CDH Kenya's IP, Technology, Media and Telecommunications practice, unpacks some of the legal and practical considerations that business owners should bear in mind while carrying out corporate and commercial rebranding exercises.

Renewed efforts by the taxman to collect rental income tax

On 18 October 2022, the Kenya Revenue Authority (KRA) issued a notice to the public of its intent to undertake a data collection exercise on rental properties within Nairobi City County and the Nairobi Metropolis. This exercise, which entails moving from house to house to collect information from tenants on their landlords, has elicited reactions from the public. Accordingly, the taxman's move raises a lot of questions, for tenants, landlords, and the public at large. Some of the key questions that need to be addressed include: what Rental Income Tax (RIT) is, how it is paid, how KRA can enforce payment of RIT under the law, the parts of the country where KRA's data collection exercise be conducted, whether KRA has conducted similar data collection exercises before and what the key data protection issues are. Click here to listen as Alex Kanyi, Shem Otanga, and Joseph Macharia provide some clarity on the taxman's data collection exercise, its legal founding under current law, and the implications to taxpayers and KRA.
